As to the public it must burn much or little coal according to its ability to pay syndicate prices. At the time the strike was ordered to was stated in the local press that there were in the employ of the fuel company some 2,000 men, of which less than 300 were members of the United Mine Workers' union; less than 15 per cent of the whole. John Mitchell (speaking through local No. 15 of Colorado) ordered this "15 per cent" to strike, and they did strike, and thereupon in effect demanded of the coal company that it discharge the remaining 55 per cent of its employes. The alternative given to these non-union men being "Join the union or get out of camp."

being "Join the union or get out of camp."

The coal company not only refused to accede to this demand, but refused to submit such a demand to arbitration. I think they were right, and so stated to the governor and members of the board and, further, that I would not sit in arbitration even should both parties request it. Perhaps, as you say, my refusal would be a violation of duty under the statute creating the hoard. But you help me out of the dilemma by quoting a precedent in a very celebrated case. The Roosevelt commission in the recent anthractic strike, wherein the commission announced in effect "that no award could be made affecting the right of employers to employ whom they chose, nor of the right of men to work whether they belong to unions or not."

No grievance or other demand was made by the strikers, and they had, thereupon, quit the employ of the company. For this latter reason, if no other, the board would have been prohibited by the statutes from entertaining their petition for arbitration had they sought its assistance.

The strike was mainly for an eight-hour day in Colorado. Should this is percent of the force employed in Utah succeed in unionizing the other $5 per cent the mines must be closed, and remain closed outil an eight-hour day is accorded in Colorado. It was for the avowed purpose of bringing about this condition in our mines that the emissaries of Mr. Mitchell were sent into this state, for which cause I suggested that they should have been met upon the border and turned back. Perhaps I should have said "hemp" and the nearest tree. The New York Engineering and Minhag Journal, discussing what it terms "This Development of Popular Government," says:

"Now come the labor union leaders (of Colorado) and request the governor to call a special session of the legislature in order to pass an eight-hour law, and if this is done they promise to send the men back to work.

"In Montana, a few days ago, a consolidation or blind pool of copper mining companies suffered by what it believed to be an unfair judicial decision, and forthwith it closed its mines and smelters, threw 12,000 men out of employment and paralyzed the fuduratival activity of an entire state. Then, the copper mining companies suffered by what it would resume operations and put all the men to

THANKSGIVING TURKEY.

To The Salt Lake Herald:
This may be hard on the turkey; but why is it that that foul old bird is held up for Thanksgiving, and at prices of 100 per cent in advance of its normal value? And why is it not in demand on any of the 35t days in the year?
These questions suggested themselves to me today while I was partaking of the usual Thanksgiving dinner, and it occurred to me that it was to remind us that if we had nothing else to be thankful for, that we would not be called on to eat turkey again for another year. The only thing that makes it tolerable is the stuffing and the cranberry sauce; and without them. I would just as soon have a slice of well cured white blanket as the white meat, and a miniature Indian club draped with decayed rubber as the black meat.

Any time before Thanksgiving a good. To The Salt Lake Herald: neat.
